WARREN BUFFETT SECURITY GUARD SO WHOLESOME, YOU'LL FEEL BAD ABOUT YOURSELF

2:32 pm, April 25th | by Hillary Reinsberg

Billionaire “Oracle of Omaha” Warren Buffett never asked his personal security guard of more than 15 years to sign a non-disclosure agreement — possibly because he’s employing the one person in the world more wholesome than he is.

In a “tell-all” interview with the Omaha World-Herald, former police officer Dan Clark actually told very little about his boss’ personal life. We’d be more disappointed, but Clark’s assertion that he and Buffett “have always done business on a handshake based on trust,” just warms our cynical little hearts to the core.

Clark crossed paths with the Berkshire Hathaway exec after a chance meeting with Buffett’s daughter in an Omaha bagel joint in the 90’s, in the midst of breaking news reports that bank robbers were looking to kidnap the elder Buffett. Alarmed, Buffett’s daughter questioned the nearest policeman, at which point Clark offered his protective services. Since 1995, Clark has been Buffett’s right hand man.

“The first year it was me, with a protein bar in my pocket, with Mr. Buffett. I didn’t take a meal break, and I didn’t sit down. By the end of the weekend, I was dog-tired,” Clark said.

Luckily, Buffett’s utter dearth of controversial traits has kept the Clark’s job pretty quiet. Buffett’s security outfit has expanded in recent years — after all, he is the world’s third-richest; a tricked out protective staff is necessary, if only for appearances. Still, Clark has the greatest access to the inner workings of the investment guru’s business dealings and private life.

So why the @!&$* won’t he tell us anything juicy!?
